In the year 1810 a census was conducted to record and count the Jewish population of West Prussia, town by town. In Zempelburg, the largest Jewish community in southern West Prussia, 971 names were listed, amongst them (line 65): Schmul Isaac, his wife Zore, his son Abraham, age 12, and daughters Feigelche, age 6, and Chaie, age 5. Two years later, in 1812 Schmul Isaac adopted a permanent family name and became Samuel Isaac Israelski. His wife Zore (Sara) and son Abraham are our direct ancestors. Schmul (Samuel) is listed in 1810 as a feather dealer.

In March 1812 the governor of the Prussian province of West Prussia issued an edict requiring all the Jews of the province to adopt permanent family names. Inspection teams fanned out to all the towns and they registered all adult male Jews and Jewish widows, listing their new complete name (left column) and their former patronymic name (center column) as well as the town of residence (right column). Some 2382 Jewish heads of family thus received family names, which they were required to use in all official and public records thereafter. Until this registration most Jews used their father's personal name in combination with their own name, and so the "family" name would change with each generation. Thus we see (No. 1033 above) that Samuel Isaac (Samuel, son of Isaac) became Samuel Isaac Israelski, and Wittwe (widow) Jacob Gerche added the name Israelski to the name of her late husband. (We do not know her personal name). The brothers Baruch and Schye (Yeshiah=Isaiah), sons of Simon, took the name Gaba. They may have been relatives of Esther Gabbe. In the entire province, the only Jews who took the name Israelski and Gaba were living in Zempelburg. Samuel Isaac Israelski (sic) was listed twice, a clerical error. (No. 1038)
